Abstract

An exploratory examination of workplace friendship deterioration processes was conducted using employees' narrative accounts of their experiences. Narratives revealed five primary causes of workplace friendship deterioration - personality, distracting life events, conflicting expectations, promotion, and betrayal. Narratives also indicated that individuals relied primarily on indirect communication tactics, including avoidance of nonwork topics in conversation, nonverbal cues, and avoidance of socializing away from the workplace to disengage from workplace friendships. Consequences of workplace friendship deterioration included emotional stress, reduced ability to perform tasks, turnover, and altered perceptions regarding the role of friendships in the workplace. Discussion and suggestions for future research are provided. (PsycINFO Database Record (c) 2007 APA, all rights reserved) (journal abstract)

Abstract

(from the chapter) A foundational assumption of this chapter is that it is possible to draw a distinction between pathological and normal spiritual development. An alternative approach is, however, possible. Some might argue that spiritual development is socially constructed such that the designation of a particular form of spirituality as pathological is a matter of interpretation, based entirely on social convention, rooted as it may be in historicopolitical structures. In the end, the radical relativism of such a position is philosophically and even functionally unsatisfying. However, this perspective is valuable in elucidating the cultural influences on the understanding of spiritual development and its location in a particular context. The authors begin this chapter by briefly discussing the history of attention paid to spiritual and religious pathology in the social sciences, followed by definitional issues and four "methods" for identifying pathological development. They then turn to specific examples of spiritual pathology. In this chapter they will also address four areas of religious and spiritual pathology that make their appearance in youth and have been given attention within the social sciences: delusions, terrorism, cults or new religious movements, and the special case of young people who have been subjected to trauma.
